

ABSTRACT

A system includes a first node that broadcasts a request for data. A second node having a first state associated with the data defines the second node as an ordering point for the data. The second node provides a response to the first node that transfers the ordering point to the first node in response to the request for the data.